... Radescu has proposed to deposit with the CAROMAN all the amounts of money he gets from Malaxa, provided Gretsianu deposits the "same amount from the fund." Gretsianu rejected categorically the project. . .

10 Sept 1949—General Radescu made following statements:

"In conformity with the decision of the National Committee, the Proclamation to the Country was conveyed to His Majesty the King by the Office of the Secretary General in New York, together with the draft of the Royal declaration, which was submitted to it.

"It is regrettable that the text was not transmitted at once, but this is due, certainly, to the lack, by that time, of a Secretary Generalship.

"The Committee will take all required measures in order to avoid, in the future, such omissions. . .

"I regret that a personal letter of mine, which does not involve the Committee, could have been interpreted in the sense that I would consider that the Committee can not work. I wish to state that I am convinced, as besides I have pointed out in the conclusion of my letter, that this Committee can work effectively.

"The Committee takes note of General Radescu statement and agrees that the Committee can work effectively. If it would not have been so, the Committee itself would have considered it of its duty to submit the situation to His Majesty's attention. . .

... General Radescu acknowledges being personally financed by Mr. Malaxa. . .
